

The McClendon Center has worked with Social Work PRN for more than five years, but never have we been so challenged with the need for social workers until last year when our agency underwent a major expansion. Our rather small outpatient clinic tripled in size in five months. We knew our need for intake workers was temporary since we were only going to take in so many new clients, so Social Work PRN was a perfect option for us. Janan sent us three licensed social workers who conducted back-to-back intakes for three months. All of these professionals were great at building rapport, gathering the right information, and documenting their services the same day they were delivered. We have utilized Social Work PRN since then due to our clinical director being on maternity leave, and that has preserved the sanity of the other social workers who are already covering other duties.

Without an option for temporary staffing, existing staff can be spread too thin. Without professional staffing, quality work just can't happen. The McClendon Center relies on Social Work PRN to give us the professionals we need to do a quality job, and only for the time we really need their services. Social Work PRN has been a lifesaver.
